Language and Discourse Translation In The West and Middle East

Language, discourse, and translation in the West and Middle East: Robert Debrugeau 1998: The papers collected in this volume are a selection of papers presented at a conference on Language and Translation (Istanbul, 1992). In their revised form, they offer comparisons between Western and Arabic language usage and transfer. The articles bring together linguistic and cultural aspects of translation in a functional discourse framework set out in Part One: Theory, Culture, Ideology. Part Two addresses aspects of comparision among translations and their cultural contexts (reception, style, and perspective). Part Three features Arabic-English language contact, specifically in technical fields, the media, and academia. Part Four deals with problems in linguistic terminology and praxeology, with particularity in relation to the effects of global English and the discourses of commerce. The interlink between discourse and the construction of power is evident in many contributions that study institutional power and the linguistic resources which work transferring/interposing positions. An array of semiotic and cultural theories are covered, including Arabic, Chinese, English, German, Korean and Spanish. Originally published as a special issue of Target 23:3 (2010).
