families, former students, practicing nurses and clinical nurse specialists to bring the ideas in the text to life. Try It Out features are learning activities that engage students in a range of ways with the content in the chapter. These learning activities, typically three or four per chapter, can be incorporated into activities in classrooms, clinical settings, online, or other teaching-learning settings. Text Boxes: Many of the chapters include text boxes to summarize and highlight some of the key relational inquiry ideas and/or strategies. For example, this feature presents a story that illustrates a point being made in the text. The authors often return to the story in the chapter in which it is presented and in subsequent chapters. This Week in Practice: Each chapter has a learning activity at the end of the chapter that integrates the ideas presented in the chapter and draws upon readers’ past or current practice experiences. These activities provide opportunities for the students to practice translating the chapter ideas into their clinical practice. Learning Objectives: Each chapter begins with identified learning objectives. These learning objectives align with each of the main sections of the chapter. Figures and Visual Images: The authors have included figures that depict the relationship between ideas as well as visual images which are focused on stimulating critical thinking through visual means as well as through written text.
