Blacks In Topeka Kansas, 1845-1915 Themanius C. Cox 1989-01-01 Tracing the development of a black community in the trans-Mississippi West, Blacks in Topeka, Kansas, 1845-1915 is a thorough, insightful examination of an area of black history that has received, at best, scant attention. Thomas C. Cox probes in this study the political, social, and economic standing of blacks and the growth of black institutions in the Topeka area from early settlement during the territorial period through the rise of an urban Topeka in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. In the development of the black community was the Great Exodus of the 1870s—the mass migration of southern blacks that brought the community new leaders, businessmen, skilled laborers, and provided the impetus for establishment of institutions and clubs. The struggle for equal rights and the Civil War helped to clarify the nature of black emancipation and the role of the black community. The founding of the Free State in the 1850s and the rise of the black press, including the influential Colored Citizen and Plattevilier, and the emergence of such community leaders as William Earl Jack and James C. Atlee, and the Black Community tradition that perpetuated itself in the work of subsequent generations, the Great Exodus brought about organized protest by the black community to enhance the advantages of social and economic progress. As this movement grew in strength, it became a powerful bond that ensured divisions within black Topeka, and gave rise to a cohesive community group in strong local institutions through which blacks could challenge racism, rule, and national sentiment. The book will help to create a significant degree of modernization. With relevance to American social history in local government, Thomas C. Cox's Blacks in Topeka, Kansas, 1845-1915 fully utilizes the methods and materials of social history—social analysis and group biography—to coherently demonstrate the significance of Topeka in the history of race relations and the growth of political and public institutions.
